SACRAMENTO – It's difficult to stay connected to people, places and paperwork when you move from one home to another several times each year. It's a common scenario for foster children who often don't have access to computers where they live, especially those living in rural counties like Tulare County.

In order to help those students have access to resources, educational materials, stay in touch with friends and keep important information with them as they move from placement to placement, two organizations have joined forces to provide more than 1000 foster youth statewide with a laptop computer.

On Jan. 29, the Rural County Representatives of California (RCRC) and National Homebuyers Fund, Inc. (NHF) announced a joint contribution of $400,000 to provide an iFoster laptop computer to all eligible foster youth and former foster youth aged 16-21 within RCRC's 35 member counties, which includes Tulare County.

RCRC and NHF's Boards of Directors each approved providing $200,000 to support the 1 Laptop Program for Foster Youth. Through this one-time contribution, more than 1,100 eligible foster youth and former foster youth in care will receive laptops within 35 rural counties. About 155 foster youth are eligible to receive a laptop through the program, the largest population of any member county.

"We are proud to be part of this group which advocates for rural counties," said Supervisor Kuyler Crocker, who represents Tulare County on RCRC's board. "When Tulare County has the largest population among your membership then you know this organization is focused on helping rural counties."

The 1 Laptop Program for Foster Youth is run by iFoster, a national non-profit serving the child welfare community, including formal foster care, guardianship, informal kinship care, transition-age youth (16-24) and probation. iFoster's mission is to ensure that every child growing up outside of their biological home has the resources they need to become independent adults and to have access to opportunities to reach their full potential. The 1 Laptop Program is designed for foster youth and former foster youth ages 16-21.

A 2016 study of 730 youth across California who received iFoster computers found that only 5 percent of rural foster youth have consistent access to a computer in their homes, compared to 90 percent of all teens, and 79 percent of low-income teens (Pew Research Center, 2014). When provided with a computer, 98 percent of youth reported using it on a daily or weekly basis, and statistically significant improvements were found in academic performance, social connectiveness, and life satisfaction.

Owning a computer addresses additional challenges for foster youth, including accessing needed resources and the loss or misplacement of important life documents as youth move from placement to placement. The iFoster Transitional Age Youth (TAY) Assistant includes a HIPAA compliant secure online digital locker, accessible anywhere, anytime, which is fully integrated into iFoster's resource portal and programs. Currently, more than 6,600 iFoster TAY members are utilizing the TAY Assistant, resulting in fewer vital documents lost, access to more than 500 needed resources, and improved youth support networks. All youth receiving laptops funded by RCRC and NHF will be provided with the TAY Assistant.

"I am proud to be part of two organizations that display overwhelming generosity to Californians in need," said Greg Norton, President and CEO of RCRC, and President of NHF. "The 1 Laptop Program for Foster Youth will change the legacy of many of California's current and former foster youth, providing them with access to essential resources, job training and the connectivity needed to succeed in today's online world."

iFoster will begin working with local agencies on determining youth eligibility, with a goal of distributing the laptops in 2018.
