RED BLUFF — The Tehama County Economic Development Team will join with development, business and agricultural officials from around the state in August to seek ways to remove barriers and promote economic growth in the county.

Local business owners will be invited to join US Department of Agriculture Rural Development California State Director Kim Dolbow Vann and representatives from the Governor's Office of Business and Economic Development, Rural County Representatives of California and California Association of Local Economic Development for a discussion around government barriers that stymie growth in the county, and possible solutions to promote progress, according to a press release.

"Tehama County Economic Development is thrilled to have an open and direct discussion with Director Vann and local business owners about the different state and federal regulations that hinder growth in our rural county," said Supervisor Bob Williams said. "I expect Director Vann will have productive suggestions for local business owners. And I hope we leave the session with a list of action items for Tehama County Economic Development, USDA-RD, RCRC and CALED to partner on that will improve the local business climate and regulation."

The organizations will gather with invited stakeholders to discuss barriers to success and learn about programs available to help advancement for the county.

The event will be held Aug. 10 at the Tehama County Administration Office at 727 Oak St. in Red Bluff.
